CIA DESERVES A NATIONAL VOTE OF THANKS

BILL DOWNS: "And some revised thoughts about America's super secret CENTRAL INTELLIGENCE AGENCY. The details in just a moment..."

STATINTL

"Since the Cuban invasion fiasco of last April, and the hullabaloo over the part the Central Intelligence Agency played in that abortive Caribbean adventure, the super-secret arm of the White House has crawled back under its security blanket where it belongs. And although the CIA now is pursuing anonymity with a vengeance, it's not likely that the big intelligence operation will be allowed to forget its part in the unhappy Cuban invasion for a long time to come.

"The Republicans most certainly make President Kennedy's go-ahead for the Bay of Pigs landing a political issue for the 1962 and '64 elections. Fidel Castro's propaganda machine hardly lets a day go by without blaming the CIA for just about everything.
And now the Central Intelligence Agency is catching it in its propaganda neck again as being the evil power behind United States intervention in the Dominican Republic's political crisis.
The sending of a U.S. Navy flotilla to international waters off the Dominican Republic was, of course, much more than a CIA phase of Washington policy concerning defense of the Western hemisphere, about which much more will be said and debated.

"However, from what it is now known of this government's swift and firm reaction to the dangerous crisis in the Dominican Republic, the Central Intelligence Agency deserves a national vote of thanks for a job done quietly, efficiently, and effectively.
And, without CIA involvement in the controversial politics of the Caribbean as happened in the chaotic Cuban affairs seven months ago. Using sound intelligence from the capital of Ciudad Trujillo, now Santo Domingo, and apparently from inside Cuba itself, the United States was able to use its power, prestige and persuasives to prevent the island government from returning to the dictatorial rule of the Trujillo family on the right, hand, while on the left Castro's pro-communists were unable to send in outside help to engineer a coup of their own.
